Market Outlook

The bond yields of the US Treasury and IndoGb in June 2024 moved in different directions. The US Treasury yield declined, driven by lower inflation and softer job market data. Additionally, the market has projected that the Fed will cut rates this year. However, there is a supply risk in the US budget, which will be announced by the end of July 2024. Consequently, the US Treasury yield was hovering within a relatively narrow range between 4.2% and 4.5%. In the domestic bond market, investors were concerned about the debt issuance of the incoming government. With many vital projects in the pipeline, the budget deficit could widen beyond the current limit of 3%. This created pressure on bond yields, which remained elevated throughout June 2024. Fortunately, the current finance minister collaborated with the elected government to provide responsive information to calm the market. The debt ratio will remain prudent moving forward, and the main national projects will be implemented gradually. Additionally, the government has signalled the use of SAL (Saldo Anggaran Lebih) as an additional source of funding, thus minimizing the supply risk. The exchange rate of the Rupiah remained under pressure both against USD and Indonesia's trading partners' currencies. It led to higher IndoGb yield, presenting an opportunity for investors to add more fixed-income assets.
