Market Outlook

In May 2025, the Indonesian equity market experienced a combination of recovery and volatility, influenced by both global and domestic factors. The market was buoyed by a significant easing of global trade tensions, particularly following the US-China trade agreement reached earlier in the month, which improved investor risk sentiment toward emerging markets like Indonesia. Additionally, Bank Indonesia (BI) implemented a rate cut, further supporting market sentiment by easing monetary conditions. These developments helped the Jakarta Composite Index (JCI) rally by 14.4% over the past three months, despite a modest year-to-date gain of just 1.4%. Domestically, clarity around the Danantara sovereign wealth fund's operations helped calm earlier market concerns about governance and fiscal management. Coupled with rising government spending and anticipated improvements in liquidity in the second half of 2025, these factors supported a shift in investor preference toward equities over bonds. However, several concerns tempered market enthusiasm. Economic growth forecasts for 2025 were revised downward to below 5%, driven largely by sluggish household consumption, which contracted by 8% month-on-month following the Ramadan period, and ongoing layoffs in the manufacturing sector. While agriculture showed strong double-digit growth, manufacturing, which accounts for 19% of GDP, remained under pressure. The market also remained sensitive to foreign capital movements, as evidenced by outflows of IDR 50.7 trillion in first four months of 2025, although inflows improved in May. The rupiah's exchange rate hovered below Rp16,500 per USD, and rising U.S. Treasury yields, which climbed to 4.5%, posed additional risks. The BI rate cut helped ease some pressure on the rupiah and supported liquidity, but the market remained cautious given external uncertainties and domestic economic challenges. Looking ahead, focus remains on undervalued domestic stocks, especially those linked to Danantara and sectors likely to benefit from fiscal stimulus. While short-term volatility related to trade negotiations and the maturity of SRBI bonds in May and June 2025 could persist, improving liquidity conditions supported by the BI rate cut are expected to foster greater market stability over the medium term.
